Georgian College Auto Show 2000

The largest outdoor auto show in North America, the Georgian College Auto Show, happened over three days last week, and although a third of the time was a little marred by foul weather, it was still—as usual—a big success. It was only five dollars to get in, and there were draws for prizes. It was fun to check out both the practical and the dream cars.

Like the center photo? It would've been better if I could've been waving from the inside, but I wasn't allowed in. Heck, nobody was, because that car—the Atlantic—is worth $2,000,000. It's a concept car, and it's also the only one of its kind. Who woulda thought that the wizards at Chrysler could make something that I could love as much as the Viper? The Atlantic rivals the movie edition Batmobile, fer cryin' out loud (but nothing will ever usurp the '60s TV Batmobile for me)! On the other end of the scale (bottom left) is the Ford Think, an electric car with a plastic body. It's like a deluxe member of the Big Wheel family. It too was locked, although likely not for the same reason as the Atlantic.

A TRIBUTE TO FOREIGNER

OCT 19-CLARK NOVA

Nifty. I'm gonna go to both!

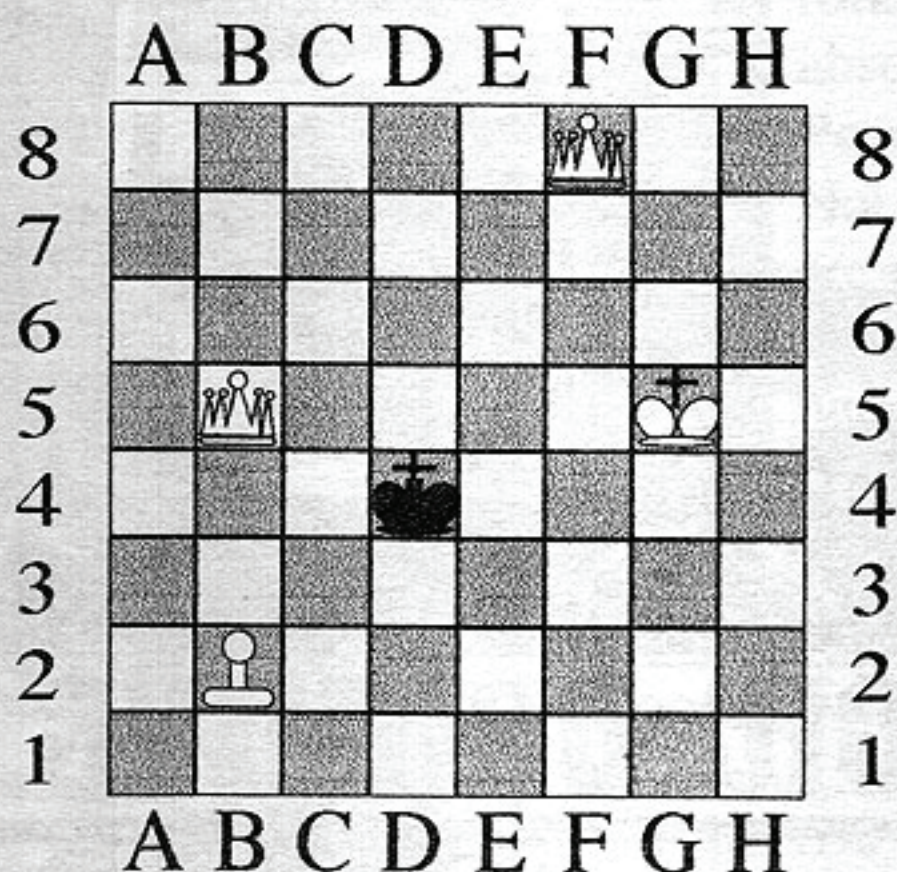

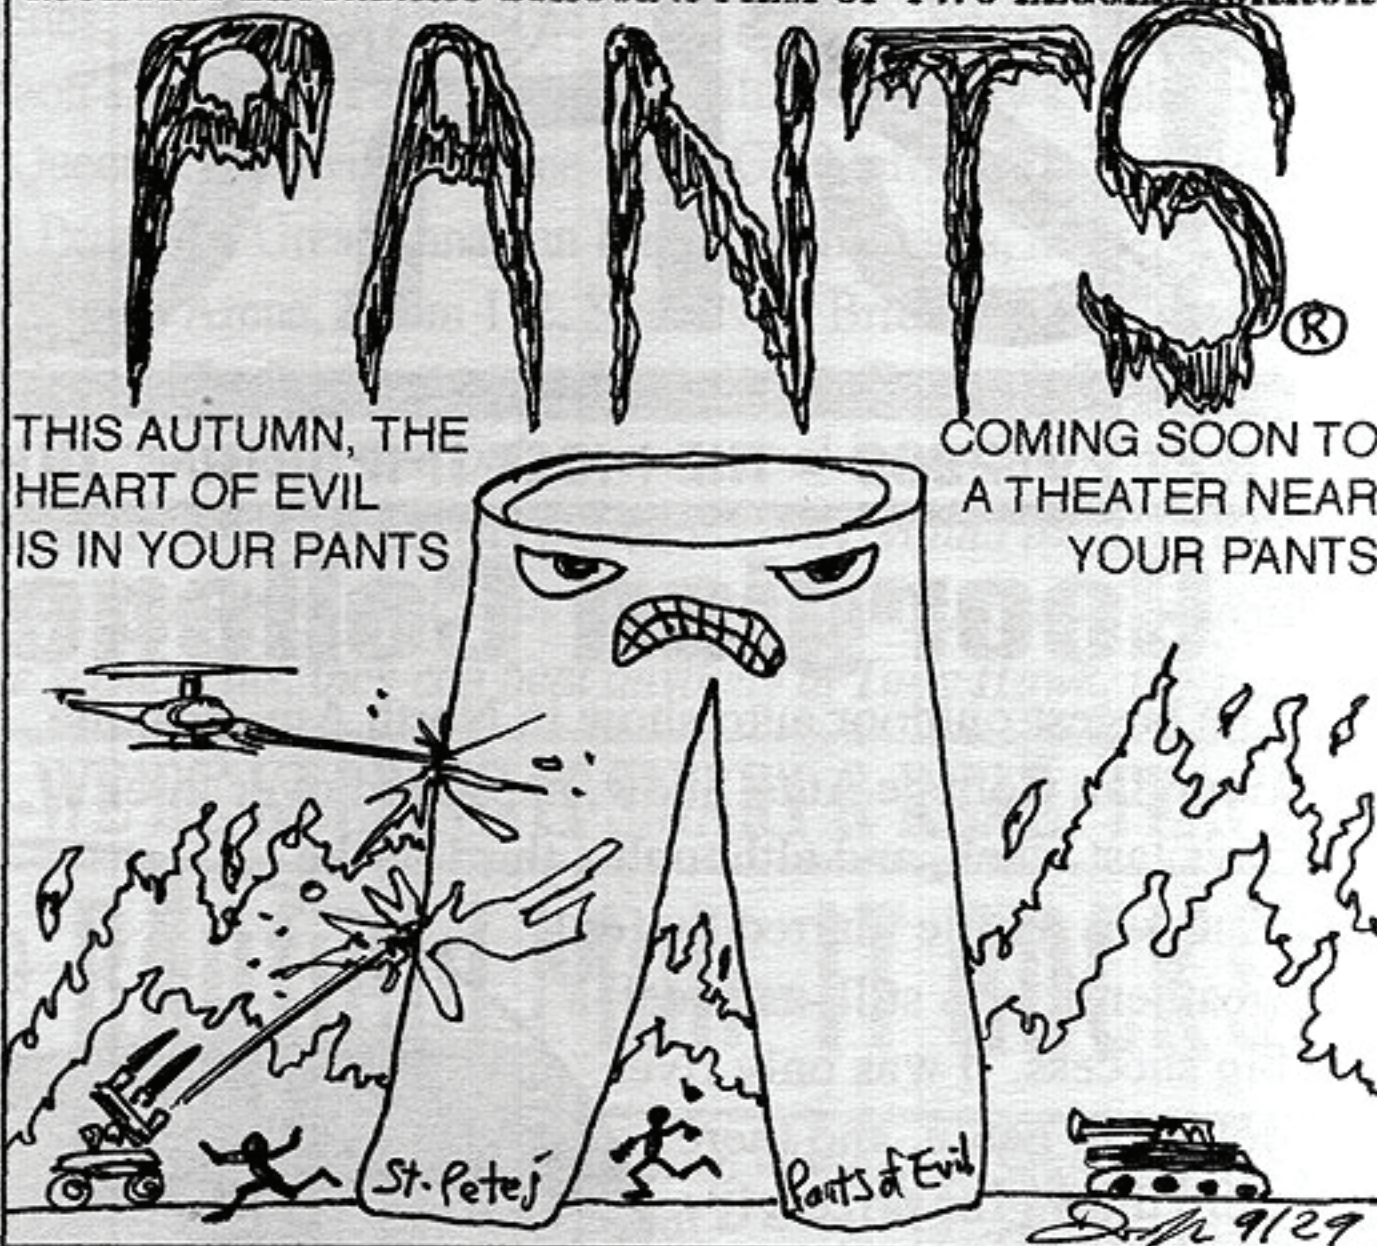

Greetings, sports fans, and welcome to another issue of CROWE. Everybody agreed with me and my decision to chastise the media for pestering Pierre Trudeau while he is ill. I didn't get much email about it, but what I did get was all favourable.

In my Back-to-School issue, I had told you all that you had my sympathies if you had to go back to school, and also that the covert intent of school is to wear you down and turn you into obedient consumers. Sure, if you play the game, you'll have a job and thus, money when it's all done with, but those who play our society's games best learn to complain, question, and challenge the least. Hey kids, check out the majority of the adult population who sees nothing wrong with buying ridiculously over-powered, gas guzzling Sport Utility Vehicles just to tool around the city and lumber through fast food drive-thrus.

Here's a couple of real lessons. The teacher who wrote 64 letters to a 13 year-old boy while she was in her late twenties shouldn't be teaching. Remember that the people who will be governing you throughout the school year, the people who will be wearing serious faces and making giant productions out of you being late for class and other trivial things, remember that they are absolutely wrong.

They're idiots for letting that freak woman teach again—especially so soon after the incident. The next time you get nailed for chewing gum in class, just bring up their Board's decision to rehire Ms Sclater, and tell 'em to go to hell. And how about the infamous pants affair at St. Peter's Catholic Secondary School? What did I tell you all two issues back about the covert purpose of school? In this day and age, we have far too much useless, consumer-specific technology screwing with our lives. Your control is lessened because of it, and now you're not even allowed to control your own f@*#*n pants?! Give me a break. You pay taxes on all the stuff you buy, and some of that money eventually goes back to your school, therefore you've got every right to control what you wear. Wearing a tuxedo or an empty potato sack won't make you any smarter or stupider, so what's the deal with the pants, St. Peter's? People should be judged by their actions, and if in school, by their marks. If people choose to wear different pants that's their personal business. If you're at St. Peter's, tell your school officials to wear the uniforms. Better still, tell them all to bugger off to some Communist country where they can frolic in all the damn uniforms they want. The students kicked ass and got the policy changed. That's the lesson to remember.

CROWE is published every second Friday, and contains satirical material. From what I've heard, the latest KISS show in Hamilton was awesome. OK Erin, here we go again...get in contact with that guy you know who is sometimes a Karaoke DJ...ask him about the South Park: Bigger, Longer and Uncut movie Karaoke CD, and then tell me about it. Now. RIGHT F@*#*N NOW BEFORE THEY'RE ALL GONE! (Cartman's voice) I am so much...wanting...to get...that CD...it would be so totally cool. And then I could make a copy of it and then Kenny's family could use it as an heirloom, because they are so poor. Playstation2 and the new Apple line rule the world. Bill Gates can go to hell with his PCs and punk-ass Xbox. Stumbling through the construction is like an adventure, isn't it? This satirical thing is totally 100% owned by the publisher. So now you know

Dragon Subdued

The weather was not the only variable that threatened the success of the Georgian College Auto Show, there was also Stan, the KIA dragon. His full name is unknown, but Stan's most recent work was as a stunt double for Godzilla in this summer's poorly received Godzilla 2000. Impressed with his work, KIA promoters made a fast deal with Stan, and flew him in from Japan. Onlookers were puzzled when confronted with the fearsome spokesdragon, especially since KIA refers to themselves as the "new kid in town," in their affable Canadian ads which feature a line of inexpensive, fuel-efficient cars.

"Power and aggression were not the messages KIA wanted to communicate," said Alan Smithee, head of the show's PR dept. "Stan picked up on that vibe right away. He started to get a little ticked off. Maybe the jet lag was a contributing factor, but in any event, nobody bothered to follow him when he walked off into the woods to take a leak. We found out later that he'd broken into The Last Class and gotten into the liquor cabinet. It wasn't pretty when he got back to the show, let me tell you."

Upon returning, Stan frightened children, filled in ballots for draws he wasn't eligible for, demanded to sample all of the vendors' food wares, collected brochures from everybody with no intention of reading any of them and displayed bad manners in all available situations. After he urinated on the Daewoo tent, campus security was called in, and Stan was partially restrained.

"He caused about one hundred grand in damage, but due to his diplomatic immunity status, we cannot and will not charge him with anything," added Smithee.

Stan calmed down a bit, and resumed greeting visitors in an agreeable fashion, yet still, more than a little resentment remained.

"Y'know somethin' pal—it's about time everybody had a well made car," said Stan as he mocked his temporary employer's ad slogan. "And this piece of crap isn't it," he said with a sly grin as he leaned back and kicked the KIA X1 familysport off the show-grounds and into a farmer's field beside the new Royal Victoria Hospital immediately after this photo was taken

MUSIC PRO delivers the professionals

A couple of weeks ago Music Pro hosted an awesome Roland product information day. There were Roland tech people showing off a ton of new stuff for guitar, keyboard and drum players. A lot of folks learned a heckuva lot in the Pro's huge store. Personally, my absolute favourite by far was the Roland Handsonic HPD-15 Hand Percussion Pad. Most other pads are meant to be played with sticks. Not this baby. It's for all the other exotic percussive instruments that are played by hand. The amazing pad replicates the physics of each instrument. You walk up to this thing and go tappity-tap with your hands and it just turns it into magic. Over 300 sounds from Latin countries, Asia, India, and more. I didn't wanna let it go!
